the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995. The public sector has also become an important employer of women, with 50% of public sector employees being women in 1995.

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of women. One reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in the lower paid, routine jobs. Another reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in the higher paid, professional jobs. A third reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in the part-time jobs.

The public sector has also become an important employer of women because of the increasing demand for public services. The demand for public services has increased because of the ageing population, the increasing demand for health care, and the increasing demand for education. The public sector has responded to this demand by increasing its employment of women.
